Terry Holdbrooks- Repatriating Prisoners

We started off in Guantanamo, and on a C-130 flew from Guantanamo to Iraq, Afghanistan and back to Turkey, had four days of down time in Turkey, went to Germany, and then came to Virginia, and then back to Guantanamo. Um, a C-130 is a huge airplane. It's two stories. There were individuals up on the top, they were trained by the Air Force; the only individuals who had guns. Um, they were stationed up above, constantly just surveying back and forth between the detainees. And if any type of suspicious movement would happen, or if a detainee got free or whatnot, they were the only individuals who could respond to it. And obviously their response would be to shoot, shoot upon sight.

Uh, the detainees were wearing denim suits, had gloves, or not gloves, had goggles over their eyes, earmuffs, and had gloves on. There were two restrooms designated for the detainees, and two restrooms designated for the guards. What was kind of interesting was, when we would let them use the restroom, we wouldn't take the shackles off. So I can only imagine that if they had to use the restroom during that flight, they probably had a very uncomfortable remainder of hours.
